TECHNIQUES

Revision techniques that work

Re-reading notes feels productive but doesn't help much. These active techniques make your brain work, so things stick.

Active recall

Close the book and test yourself. What can you remember? Then check and fill the gaps.

Spaced practice

Revisit topics after a day, a few days, then a week. Little and often beats cramming.

Past papers

Practise real exam questions, then mark them with the mark scheme. Notice the patterns.

Blurting

Write everything you know about a topic on a blank page in five minutes, then check what you missed.

Flashcards

Question on the front, answer on the back. Sort into "know it" and "not yet" piles.

Teach it

Explain a topic out loud to someone (or your pet!). If you can teach it, you know it.

Mind maps

Put the topic in the middle and branch out. Great for seeing how ideas connect.

Mix it up

Switching between topics (interleaving) feels harder but helps you remember more.
